Division of Advancement and Strategic Initiatives
Dear Alumni and Friends:

This annual report celebrates your significant contributions to Colorado State University and reflects upon a year of excellence and achievement. As we look toward 2007, we do so with a renewed sense of possibility and promise, with a clear vision for what it means to set the standard as a major research university in the 21st century.

This has been a great year at Colorado State. Together, we raised a record $95 million in private support, including the largest single gift in University history. We achieved the first net gain of new faculty positions in 15 years; strengthened our focus on supporting local, regional and national economic development and quality of life; renewed and expanded our commitment to graduate education; achieved record levels of research funding as our faculty gained international recognition for their groundbreaking discovery and scholarship; placed new emphasis on the Honors Program, with a focus on recruiting high-ability students; formed new alliances with universities worldwide to support global opportunities for research collaboration and student exchange; and continued a three-year expansion in both need and merit-based student-aid.

Building on this success, the University – with the leadership of the Board of Governors of the Colorado State University System – has challenged itself with a series of “stretch goals” that will have tremendous impact on our capacity to address the changing needs of Colorado and the world’s knowledge-based economy.

These five-year stretch goals offer an ambitious but attainable roadmap to greatness for Colorado State, including the addition of 450 new faculty positions, improving student access and success, strengthening our research base, building a competitive athletics program that serves the institution well, and increasing our endowment from $250 million to $500 million.

Achieving these goals will not be easy, and it will require your ongoing support and engagement. But working together, we can lead Colorado State University into a new era – positioning it well as a global research leader, a home to some of the most gifted and entrepreneurial students and faculty, and a model of how a 21st-century research university makes an immediate and transforming impact on our nation and the world.

Thank you again for your support over the past year and for your unfailing commitment to the future of Colorado State.

Kind personal regards,

Larry Edward Penley
President
From the Vice President

Dear President’s Council Members:

It is my pleasure to bring you this year’s Colorado State University Report on Private Support. I am thrilled to share with you the results of a record philanthropic year that totaled $95 million in support of Colorado State University academic, research and outreach programs.

In addition, the pages that follow offer a few of the many, many stories of hope and innovation, of student achievement and academic success, and of Colorado State’s commitment to improving lives and communities in Colorado and around the world. Every day your gift touches the lives of students and makes it possible for us to pursue our shared vision of becoming the model 21st-century land-grant university with the ability to solve the most pressing issues of our time.

Find your name among the more than 4,000 fellow contributors – people just like you who have joined together to support the idea that education is the key to the future. The spirit of excellence, leadership and service that created this great institution lives on today through you and the students, faculty and staff whose work you support.

Thank you again for your ongoing commitment to outstanding educational opportunities at Colorado State University.

Very best regards,

Dr. Joyce Berry

This past year Colorado State friends and alumni helped the University secure $95 million in total private support – setting a new fundraising record and surpassing the previous year’s total by 68 percent.

The benefit of this combined support to students, the University, and the community is far-reaching. Your gifts help establish state-of-the-art facilities, recruit world-renowned faculty, and support student scholarships and first-class academic, research, and outreach programs.

Throughout this publication you’ll find stories that illustrate the difference your support makes in the Colorado State experience. Below is a brief recap of gifts that made the news. We thank you for your leadership, generosity, dedication, and support.

• In June, Five Rivers Ranch Cattle Feeding LLC gifted the College of Agricultural Sciences with a 15-acre cattle-feeding facility in Lamar, Colorado. The Southeastern Colorado Research Center is providing students and faculty with hands-on experiences that enhance the University’s ability to provide relevant, up-to-date information to agricultural professionals and the feedlot industry across the state and nation. The gift also includes five-year funding for a Department of Animal Sciences professorship, located on site. John Wagner, Ph.D., an animal nutrition expert who managed the Lamar research center for more than 10 years, fills the position. The Five Rivers Ranch gift, valued at $2.5 million, is the second largest in the history of the animal sciences department.

• In September 2005, the University honored the Everitt family and the Everitt Companies for their $2.5 million gift to establish the Everitt Real Estate Center in the College of Business. The gift was the largest ever made to the College. “There’s nothing more important than having a good education for our children, and this University, in my opinion, provides as good an education as any university in the country,” says Bob Everitt, owner of Everitt Companies and a longtime Colorado State supporter.

• Also in September 2005, the University announced that Edward M. Warner, renowned geologist, philanthropist and distinguished alumus, donated a total of $30 million to position Colorado State’s College of Natural Resources as a global leader in research and education. In honor of this gift, the College was named the Warner College of Natural Resources. It is the first named college at Colorado State and one of only a few named public colleges or schools of natural resources in the nation. Warner’s gift is the largest in the University’s history and is believed to be the largest private gift given to name any U.S. public college of natural resources. The total gift of $30 million includes a previous $4.3 million gift from Warner to the College of Natural Resources’ Department of Geosciences, to make great strides in geological education, research, and oil, gas, and mineral exploration and to create endowed chairs in geophysics and economic geology at Colorado State.

• In February, 10-year NFL veteran Brady Smith – who was an all-star defensive lineman for Colorado State from 1992-95 – donated $75,000 to Ram athletics. Smith’s gift is being used to enhance the football program by providing additional video and weight room equipment. “This gift is my attempt to express my gratitude to CSU’s football program for sending me on my way to a professional career as an athlete,” says Smith. “My hope is that this donation will help the program meet some needs, allowing it to remain a contending force in college athletics.”

• Another gift made in February makes it easier for graduate students and faculty at Colorado State and universities worldwide to compile a bibliography for a research paper. Alumni Michael and Susan Gould created a detailed set of audio/video modules called Margo Help Desk to accompany EndNote bibliographic software the University licenses for graduate students and faculty. EndNote enables users to search remote libraries and databases, store reference information and generate a bibliographic reference list in Microsoft Word. The Goulds donated use of the Margo Help Desk software, valued at $250,000, to Colorado State through the College of Business, but anyone can use the modules through the Morgan Library.

• In March, the University recognized local O’Dea Elementary School students for their unique efforts to raise scholarship funds for CSU athletes. Each year for the past eight years, fourth, fifth, and sixth graders participating in the O’Dea Ram’s Club spend September through February designing and creating colorful, handmade CSU Ram pins and selling them for 15 cents at home football, volleyball and men’s and women’s basketball games. The students learn math and people skills, meet CSU student athletes, engage in fun after-school physical activities, and attend University athletic events, all while becoming active fundraisers and supporters of Colorado State athletics. The O’Dea Ram’s Club annually raises $1,800–$2,500 for Colorado State University student athletic scholarships.
• In April, Joyce Berry, longtime, respected administrator and Yale Distinguished Alumna, became Colorado State’s new fundraising vice president. Berry, previously Dean of the College of Natural Resources, was responsible for securing the University’s largest gift ever – $26 million to name the Warner College of Natural Resources. From her tenure at Yale and Colorado State, Berry has more than 20 years of fundraising experience. As vice president, she is responsible for planning, developing and administering a coordinated University-wide effort to establish and strengthen ties with University constituents; raising private funds to support the strategic initiatives of the University; and overseeing effective recognition and stewardship programs for alumni, donors and friends.

• In April, benefactor Pat Stryker and her Bohemian Foundation made an additional gift of $1.2 million to enable Colorado State to complete its goal of installing a synthetic playing surface and constructing additional bathrooms and concessions at Hughes Stadium in time for the 2006 football season. A $15.2 million gift the Bohemian Foundation made two years ago funded the renovation of Hughes Stadium, including adding more than 4,000 permanent seats in the north end zone and installing two new scoreboards, a new video board, 12 new luxury suites, an expanded premium club seating area, and renovated press box. But last year, after the initial phase of the project was completed, material price increases delayed the installation of a new synthetic playing surface. In November, athletic department officials began a campaign to complete the renovation after Stryker agreed to match all gifts two-to-one. The Bohemian Foundation gift of $1.2 million represents her commitment to the match.

• Also in April, David E. Fahrney, a Professor in the Department of Biochemistry and Molecular Biology since 1970, included $1.5 million as part of his estate plans to establish the David E. Fahrney Chair in Biochemistry. Fahrney also donated $50,000 to endow two undergraduate biochemistry scholarships. The endowed chair is the department’s first. Fahrney, who has taught in the College of Natural Sciences for 35 years, retired last spring. “David has given so much to our students and faculty and worked hard to transform the way biochemistry is taught to the next generation of scientists,” says Rick Miranda, Dean of the College of Natural Sciences. “These gifts will ensure that his contributions to our campus will persist long past his retirement.”

• Dr. Delbert Osguthorpe, a 1943 graduate of the Colorado A&M (CSU) Professional Veterinary Medical Program, has long supported the CVMBS Scholarship Program for PVM students. In May, Dr. Osguthorpe announced that he has made a planned gift of $12 million to construct the Food Animal Care Facility at the University’s South Campus. “Dr. Osguthorpe’s generosity and continued investment in his alma mater truly leave us without the right words to express our gratitude, except for a heartfelt thank you,” noted Lance Perryman, Dean of the College of Veterinary Medicine and Biomedical Sciences.
The Development Council helps create an understanding of the special mission, value and accomplishments of Colorado State University among its private sector constituencies and helps secure the necessary support in the form of goodwill and philanthropy to advance the institution.

James L. Henry, Dedicated Ram Fan, Tireless Ambassador for Colorado State

A memorial service for Colorado State University’s Alumnus of the Century, James L. Henry, was held Wednesday, May 17, 2006 at the Edna Rizley Griffin Concert Hall. Jim Henry passed away at home on the farm Wednesday, April 26, surrounded by his loving and much loved family.

Jim was born May 7, 1917 in Greeley, Colorado, the son of Carl W. and Elizabeth Henry. He grew up on a dairy farm in Kersey, Colorado and graduated from Greeley High School in 1935.

By 1936, he had earned enough money to attend Colorado A&M, his beloved alma mater which shaped much of his life and brought him together with the love of his life, Nadine Hartshorn. He graduated from “Aggies” in 1940 and married Nadine on May 28, 1941.

Jim and Nadine moved to the farm in Longmont in 1941 where they would spend 65 years together building a loving, full life, raising 4 children, 7 grandchildren and 8 great grandchildren. Their relationship and marriage have served as a role model to many.

Jim was a successful, innovative farmer/cattle feeder, taking great pride in the appearance of his and Nadine’s beautiful farm and home overlooking the magnificent Rocky Mountains. The quality of Jim’s cattle, hogs and crops were well known throughout Colorado and beyond.

Jim’s life was defined by his great and loving passion for his wife and family; agriculture and the land; Colorado State University; and his country. He credited these passions for shaping his life and making him the man he was.

Jim was a humble, quiet and very thoughtful man. He used few words but everything he said was worth hearing. Jim loved the power of the written word and his notes and letters to family and friends were always beautifully composed, full of loving practical wisdom. A letter from Jim was a cherished and saved gift to many.

Jim was extremely resourceful and had the uncanny ability to find a solution to a situation or problem with whatever tools and/or supplies were at hand. He could fix virtually anything with bailing wire, pinchers and a pair of pliers.

Jim was an optimistic, giving man who saw the best in every person and situation. He gave freely to others, never asking for or expecting anything in return.

Jim received many awards and much recognition for his service to agriculture, Colorado State University and the National Western Stock Show (NWSS). One of his proudest accomplishments was, as a member of the Executive Committee, his involvement in the creation of the NWSS Scholarship Program. This program supports scholarships for the betterment of agriculture and rural living at CSU, University of Wyoming, UNC, Junior Colleges in Colorado and Wyoming, and CU’s Health Science Center.

The College of Agricultural Sciences named Jim its Honor Alumnus in 1967, and he received the distinguished Charles A. Lory Public Service Award from Colorado State in 1985. The prestigious Jim and Nadine Henry Award from our Alumni Association is named in their honor. In 2000, the Henrys were honored as our Alumni of the Century.

Jim was a dedicated Ram fan, a tireless ambassador for Colorado State, and a pillar of our campus, his community and the state of Colorado. Jim will be remembered with respect and affection by all who were privileged to know him, and we are extraordinarily grateful for the spirit and leadership he gave to our university for so many years. He will be dearly missed.

Jim said many times he wanted to leave this world a better place than he found it. Indeed, he accomplished that and lives on in the hearts of all who knew him.

Great Conversations Bring the College of Liberal Arts into the Community

Carol Ann Hixon remembers the first College of Liberal Arts Great Conversations event like this: “James Boyd, a philosophy professor with a special interest in Eastern religions, had recently returned from a sabbatical in Japan where he lived in a Shinto shrine complex, and he came to our home to speak. We had 15 people in our living room, and we had a conversation about his experience that was just remarkable,” says Hixon.

That was back in the late 1990s, when the College’s external advisory committee piloted the idea of bringing liberal arts faculty members into people’s homes to better engage community members in the life of the College. The idea was so well received that in 2004 Great Conversations became a membership-based program to help support the College. Since then, the program has raised more than $25,000 through memberships and $300,000 in anonymous gifts. These funds support professional development activities for faculty.

Each year, singles and couples in the surrounding community donate $500 or $1,000, respectively, to join. The College arranges for faculty members to speak on specific topics at prominent homes in the community, and volunteers Gary and Carol Ann Hixon and Dave and Paula Edwards work with the College and Great Conversations members to coordinate event dates and host homes.

“The topics are always intellectually stimulating,” says Edwards, who first became interested in the program when he was invited to attend an event at which Professor Blane Harding presented “This Species of Property: William the Slave.”

Even though Edwards has remained in Fort Collins since graduating in 1972, he attributes Great Conversations as “the vehicle that re-engaged me with the University.”

Colorado State’s professors “truly are the greatest gift to the community,” says Hixon. “They bring knowledge and passion to what they do.” She enjoys the meetings being held in a warm, inviting setting where members are free to ask questions and engage in conversation.

Through Great Conversations, “we’re able to return to the University some of what the University gives to us,” Hixon adds. “The professors enlarge my life, and with funding that comes from the membership program, I hope I’m helping them in their professional development.”

Student Callers Take University Fundraising to New Heights

Before construction management major Adam Seader graduated last year, he had raised $150,000 for Colorado State University, setting a new fundraising record among student callers in the University’s Call-A-Ram program. He’d also beefed up his already impressive resume with skills and experience that included effective communicating, supervising, and overcoming objections, not to mention honing his abilities in persuasiveness, patience, and perseverance.

Call-A-Ram even led Seader to a construction internship, when a woman he called told him her husband was seeking a project manager. Seader called to inquire, got a job, and received a donation to boot.

“Call-A-Ram is Colorado State’s student-operated outreach and ambassador program that brings in annual gifts to the University used for a variety of purposes,” explains Director of Annual Giving Julie Karbula who oversees the program. Funds go to wherever donors request, but a large portion go to the University Fund, which provides discretionary monies used for various needs.

Some of the needs typically supported through Call-A-Ram funds are scholarships, deans’ discretionary funds, academic programs, and University Libraries. The Parents Fund, established specifically for donations from parents of enrolled students, helps support student programs, such as club sports, enrichment programs, Ram Ride, and Safe Walk.

The 60-plus students who work for Call-A-Ram each year receive competitive wages to help pay their way through school, and also master engaging people they don’t know in meaningful conversation and asking them for money, says Karbula. Callers contact alumni, parents of current students, library cardholders, friends of the University, and CSU athletics supporters.

In addition to bringing in needed funds, the program puts current students in touch with past students. Former Call-A-Ram team leader Laurel Harsch recalls, “There were people who hadn’t been contacted by CSU in years who were very pleased to be called.” Harsch says she enjoyed learning about former students and gaining an historical perspective about the University and how it had affected people’s lives.

This past year, the University received $830,635, a 20-percent increase over the $693,611 received through student calling efforts the previous year. Next year’s goal is to raise $910,000 in pledges. And, because the University and CSU Foundation Endowment earnings support the student calling effort, 100 percent of the funds received through Call-A-Ram go to support the programs that donors specify.
Last year Jon and Abby Winkelried donated $1 million to Colorado State's equine veterinary programs. Before getting into the cutting horse business in 2004, the couple, owners of Marvine Ranch in Meeker, Colorado, never had been involved with the University before. Now they’re avid supporters.

It all began with a fortuitous meeting at the Fort Worth, Texas, Futurity, where the Winkelrieds were showing their three-year-olds. Having acquired and bred a large number of horses of considerable quality and value, Jon says he was eager to find equine experts who could provide quality advice and care for the animals. While at the Futurity, he met Drs. Wayne McIlwraith and Ed Squires. McIlwraith is director of the Gail Holmes Equine Orthopaedic Research Center at Colorado State, and Squires is professor of biomedical sciences and an equine reproduction expert at the University’s Equine Reproduction Laboratory.

The research center and reproduction laboratory are known worldwide for their groundbreaking advances in preventing joint problems in equine athletes, researching ways to heal orthopedic injuries, conducting internationally recognized reproduction research, and providing commercial artificial breeding services to the public.

Since that chance meeting two years ago, the Winkelrieds have developed an ongoing relationship with the University's equine experts, bringing their horses to Colorado State both for surgery and for breeding.

Their generous gift provides $500,000 for the Orthopaedic Research Center and $500,000 for the Equine Reproduction Laboratory.

“We decided to support research and staff with this gift, because we feel Colorado State is the Best In Class in terms of research facilities, and there’s a lot more to be learned and done in terms of horse care,” says Jon. “We like the veterinarians’ hands-on approach. They’re very open to having trainers, owners – people like us – come into their world and show you firsthand what’s going on. Consequently, I’ve developed a more personal interest in the technology and how they’re using that to improve the care of horses. We look forward to having a long-term relationship with the people and programs at CSU.”
The President’s Council was established in 2004 to recognize distinguished alumni and friends who support the University in its mission of quality teaching, cutting-edge research, and service to the community. Your loyal support and financial involvement is critical to the success of Colorado State University.

All donors listed in the Colorado State University Donor Honor Roll 2005-2006 contributed $1,000 or more from July 1, 2005, through June 30, 2006, or qualify as members of the Cornerstone 10 Club for recent graduates, the Lifetime Giving Societies or the Frontier Society. If you have invested in Colorado State University in any of the above categories, you will find your name listed alphabetically by last name in each category. Therefore, if you are a member of a Lifetime Giving Society and the 1870 Club, you are listed both within the appropriate Lifetime Giving Society and the 1870 Club.

The Lifetime Giving Societies are named after those educational statesmen who guided the destiny of Colorado State University. Members of the Lory, Morgan, and Presidents Societies set the standard for generosity at Colorado State and reflect the philanthropic spirit of our founders.

The Frontier Society is comprised of those individual donors who have planned gifts to the University through bequests, gift annuities, charitable remainder trusts, lead trusts, or other vehicles.

The annual giving clubs include the 1870 Club, named for the founding year of the University and including donors of $1,870 or more for the 2005-2006 fiscal year, the Cornerstone Club, recognizing donors of $1,000 to $1,869, and the Cornerstone 10 Club, recognizing recent graduate donors (within the previous ten academic years) who donate a minimum of $100 per fiscal year multiplied by the years since their graduation. Membership can be held by an individual, or jointly, or by a corporation, foundation, or an organization.

Matching gifts may be applied toward membership qualifications. Matching gift forms are usually available from an employer’s human resources or public relations office.

Gifts from members of the President’s Council provide the opportunity to build on past achievements and to reach for a future of great promise.

Thank you for submitting a custom honor roll name. In certain circumstances these custom listings have been modified for consistency.

For more information about membership in the President’s Council, or should you find your listing in error, please contact Kelle Freeman, Assistant Director, by calling (970) 491-7774, toll-free 1(866) CSU-GIVE (1-866-278-4483), www.giving.colostate.edu.
A new globally oriented master’s degree program in the College of Business is designed to help develop social entrepreneurs to meet the needs of underdeveloped countries. Working through international nongovernmental organizations, students enrolled in the new Global, Social and Sustainable Enterprises program will help people in underdeveloped villages and nations create their own private and social enterprises.

A generous gift to the College of Business Dean’s Discretionary Fund from alumnus and entrepreneur Scott Jackson helped the program get off the ground, says College of Business Dean Ajay Menon.

Three years ago, faculty had begun revitalizing the College by developing a new strategic plan that included a greater emphasis on outreach and international partnerships. Then state funding was cut. “Clearly, the mood of the College changed and many lost hope,” Menon recalls.

Then Jackson’s timely gift of $1 million came in, renewing excitement about the future of the College of Business. “We engaged faculty and staff in exploring several ideas to uniquely position the College, which included the new master’s program,” Menon continues. “Now we’re finalizing the curriculum and will launch the program next year.”

Less than 16-percent of the College’s funding comes from the state, making the need for private support – unrestricted gifts, in particular – more critical now than ever before.

Ranked 83rd among the nation’s 1,600 four-year business programs, Colorado State’s College of Business places 91-percent of its graduates in positions with an average starting salary of $40,500. Unrestricted gifts help the College maintain and improve upon this status by helping raise more scholarships for bright, deserving students. These funds also help the College stay current with the latest technology, develop new programs, recruit and retain top-notch faculty, and support faculty development.

Jackson had a successful career on Wall Street before founding ARC and taking it public. He now makes private equity investments in emerging companies and is a board member who provides strategic direction for the Denver-based investment firm, Brownfields Capital. He says the College led to his success.

“I made a 10-year commitment to the College, because I love CSU,” Jackson says. “I fondly remember a number of faculty members who made me excited about business and about my future. And Dean Menon’s unwavering energy and optimism to showcase the College and drive it forward also inspired me to give.

“I hope my gift will prime the pump and motivate other alumni, who also owe so much, to give back to the University.”

Stimulating Undergraduate Research in the Natural Sciences

Elaine Regelson and Jim Sites’ endowment of a scholarship in the College of Natural Sciences is helping to fuel much needed undergraduate student research in computer science and physics. Undergraduate research promotes inquiry, discovery, and creativity in the sciences through faculty-student mentoring relationships that integrate instruction with research and scholarship.

The endowment made by Regelson, computer science’s director of mentoring and retention, and her husband, Jim Sites, physics professor and associate dean for research in the College of Natural Sciences, provides three to four scholarships annually to motivated students who are performing research while working on their undergraduate degrees.

“There is a great deal of support for graduate student research but very little for undergraduate student research,” says Regelson. “It is really important that we encourage undergraduate students to pursue research as well.

“The need for computer scientists is very, very large,” she continues, referring to the declining enrollment of computer science majors nationwide since the highly publicized dot.com crash. “This is an issue that is well recognized in the industry,” says Regelson. Microsoft Chairman Bill Gates, for instance, has spoken across the country to stimulate interest in computer science programs.

“The James Sites and Elaine Regelson Undergraduate Research Scholarship will provide opportunities for undergraduate students to at least try research, so they can learn whether they like it,” Regelson adds. “It is absolutely fine if the students try research and decide they do not like it. What is important to me is that they have a chance to try it and find out. And we are discovering that many undergraduate students do like it very much. In fact many are making very significant contributions to faculty research and are co-authoring publications.”

Sites says the scholarship fund also supports undergraduate research in physics. “Undergraduate research seems to be the single most memorable thing alumni tell us about their Colorado State education. Consequently, we want to involve more students in that experience.”

Both Regelson and Sites say they feel fortunate to be in a position to make a difference. “I would be delighted if our gift inspires other people to do similar things,” says Sites.

Giving is nothing new to Brian Baldwin, but planning to bequest his estate is. Last fall, Baldwin made a planned gift presently valued at $2 million to Colorado State’s football program.

Considering that the 1979 graduate has been attending Ram football games since age 4, been a member of the Ram Club for more than 25 years, served on the Ram Club Board of Directors for 15 years, is a Ram Booster and also a record-breaking fundraiser for the athletic department, Baldwin could easily be dubbed the consummate Ram Fan. In four different years, he’s been the top fundraiser during the annual Ram Club membership drive.

Supporting student-athletes is a cause Baldwin believes in, and that’s exactly where Ram Club donations go. One-hundred percent of funds raised – $1.5 million annually – go to providing scholarships for 400 student-athletes competing in 16 varsity sports. This support provides ample returns: Graduation rates for Ram student-athletes are among the highest in the Mountain West Conference, and student-athletes also serve as positive role models for youths throughout Colorado.

With a degree in business management, Baldwin remains involved with his college as well, speaking at various functions and to student clubs and also serving on panels. “I received an excellent education at CSU that’s been very useful to me in my career,” he says. A financial representative with Northwestern Mutual Financial Network, Baldwin says an internship he had with the company during his junior year ultimately landed him a full-time job upon graduating.

Regarding his recent planned gift, Baldwin says he’d like the money to endow scholarships for the football team. “I strongly believe these student-athletes go on to become important to society as a whole. Many become leaders,” he says.

“In this day and age, with all the problems in the world, it’s nice to know that many of these athletes are doing something positive.”

A new Alumni and Welcome Center, to be built on Laurel Street west of Rockwell Hall, will serve as the new front door to campus, a home for alumni visiting campus, and so much more. It also will house the stories throughout history that make Colorado State University what it is today.

Now in the fund-raising stage, “the new Alumni and Welcome Center will be a place for alumni to gather for events and celebrations or to simply network and connect with each other, the University, and students in meaningful ways,” says Marc Shkolnick, executive director of the Alumni Association.

As the University’s welcoming center, the building will serve alumni, visitors, prospective and current students, parents, and the entire campus community.

It will showcase Colorado State, displaying photos and memorabilia that capture the University’s history and character and help tell its stories. “We also see the center bringing to life the University’s current and future endeavors as related to sustainable energy, infectious disease research, breaking new ground in veterinary medicine, and leading the way in construction management,” Shkolnick adds.

Tom Field, a three-time Colorado State graduate and Alumni Association president, sees the Alumni and Welcome Center as a home for the interwoven web of human stories that make the University what it is today.

“My vision is that the new Alumni and Welcome Center will be a place where we can tell these wonderful stories about the remarkable human beings who came to Colorado State and built rewarding relationships, founded businesses, started families, fulfilled ideas, and went out and changed the world,” says Field. “Everyone here gets to have a little piece of those successes and contributions, and the alumni center is a place where we share in that history.

“If I can help make the new Alumni and Welcome Center a reality, it would be the most important contribution I’ve made to the University.”

Alumni and friends are now contributing to the $19-million structure. The dream is to build a 40,000-square-foot building to accommodate the many functions the center will provide.

Colorado State University and the Colorado State University Foundation would like to thank the members of the Planned Giving Advisory Council. This group of allied professionals works closely with our Frontier Society members and potential donors to CSU. Members of the group have provided valuable estate planning sessions to interested groups and informational training sessions to our development professionals.

Why Planned Giving?

Whether your intent is to preserve the memory of a loved one, to recognize a job well done, to demonstrate deep humanitarian concerns, or support excellence in education, your charitable gift is a precious gem that needs to be protected and preserved. In light of today’s economy and the increased complexity of our nation’s tax structure, the judicious planning of your gift is crucial. The best plans balance what you strive to accomplish for yourself, your family, and your charitable interests through your overall estate and financial plans, allowing you to pass on your philanthropic cause from generation to generation.

The Office of Planned Giving at Colorado State University is here to help. We can provide you with the information you need to begin formulating a plan that will meet your financial needs so that you may perpetuate your values beyond your own lifetime. For example, did you know that you can make a gift now and secure a lifetime income in return? It may seem too good to be true, yet current federal tax law allows several ways you can do just that. Whatever your financial situation, there is a plan that is right for you.

We would like to further extend to you an invitation to join a very special group of friends whose generosity, spirit, and determination continue the legacy of the University’s visionary pioneers. The Frontier Society are those people whose planned gifts to the University include bequests, life income arrangements such as gift annuities and charitable remainder trusts, and other deferred giving options. You can designate your gift to the area or areas you wish to support, such as the University’s greatest needs through the University Fund, or to a specific college, department or program.

For more information on becoming a member of the Frontier Society and planned giving options please feel free to contact Marianne Blackwell at mblackwell@ua.colostate.edu or (970) 491-7862.

Growing up on a Colorado silver fox ranch in the 1920s and 30s, Neal McKinstry says he probably couldn’t have gone to college had it not been for a scholarship he received from the Bonfils Foundation.

McKinstry graduated from Colorado A&M (now Colorado State University) in 1941 with a bachelor’s degree in range management. Since then, he’s learned anti-aircraft artillery and map reading at the Officers Candidates School, served in the U.S. Army overseas, held range-management positions in three states, and raised award-winning Arabian horses. His most recent contribution is a planned gift of $100,000 to Colorado State to establish an endowed scholarship in the Department of Forest, Rangeland and Watershed Stewardship.

During World War II McKinstry spent four years in the army, where he taught aircraft artillery and later served with the 10th Mountain Division, fighting with Allied Forces in Italy.

Upon returning stateside in 1945, McKinstry married Marjorie, his wife of 57 years. He worked briefly in Idaho for the Grazing Service (now the Bureau of Land Management) surveying ranges. That led to a 30-year career with the Soil Conservation Service during which McKinstry conducted range surveys in Montana, worked on a land-utilization project in the area now called Pawnee National Grasslands, helped ranchers in Kremmling, Colorado, form a soil conservation district, and served as District Conservationist in Craig, Colorado.

In 1974, Neal retired and he and Marjorie began producing hay and breeding Arabian horses at their ranch in Craig. During the couple’s horse-raising heyday, their herd grew to about 40 head, and three of their Arabians were named national champions.

“I don’t know that we made any money raising the horses,” says McKinstry, “but they kept us from spending money on otherwise foolish things.”

The couple later moved to the Grand Valley, bringing a few horses with them and finding good homes for the rest. In 2002, Marjorie passed away. Neal remains in Grand Junction.

The endowment McKinstry established will create scholarships for high achieving students in good academic standing who are pursuing an undergraduate degree in forest, rangeland and watershed stewardship.

“I was fortunate to get a scholarship when I went to CSU, and it’s lucky for me that I did,” says McKinstry. “I’ll try to pass my good fortune on to other kids who will be able to go to college because of it.”

Empowering People to Conserve Natural Resources

A three-year stint in the Peace Corps, helping people in Guatemala learn how to conserve natural resources, led Stuart Conway to his passion and career path. “I knew that I wanted to dedicate my life to helping people living in poverty through my field,” says the 1983 forest management graduate.

Colorado State helped Conway realize that dream, and in return, Conway and his wife, Jenny Bramhall, have established a scholarship endowment that makes it possible for first-generation college students to attend Colorado State.

Conway’s contributions to students’ educational experiences go beyond the endowment, however. Trees, Water & People, the nonprofit organization that Conway and his colleague, Richard Fox, co-founded in 1998, provides opportunities for Colorado State faculty and students to engage in research and applying knowledge to maximize natural resources.

Established in Fort Collins, Trees, Water & People works with communities in Central America, Mexico, and the American West to educate local people and empower them with tools to protect, conserve, and manage their natural resources.

Having a ready supply of CSU interns helps the organization fulfill its mission. And having access to faculty, students and research facilities enables Trees, Water & People and Colorado State to partner on solutions that have far-reaching benefits.

When Trees, Water & People began exploring better production methods for its fuel-efficient cook stove for women in Honduras, for example, mechanical engineer Professor Bryan Willson and his students came on board, traveling to Honduras to study the project and dedicating a section of University’s Engines and Energy Conversions Laboratory as a stove testing ground. “One student has turned the project into a doctoral thesis on how to design and mass produce a better fuel-efficient stove,” notes Conway.

To date, Trees, Water & People has helped local partners build 18,000 stoves for people living in Honduras, Nicaragua, El Salvador, and Guatemala. The improved stoves use 70-percent less wood fuel, save families money, and reduce deforestation and the risk of burns and respiratory infection.

To reciprocate for the help he’s received, Conway created the Gerald and Martine Conway Scholarship Endowment, in honor of his parents, and established it at Colorado State to help less fortunate students receive an education. “I thought this was a good opportunity to give back to CSU and the community where I live,” he says.

Experiential Learning Enhances Education for Engineering Students

Colorado State’s engineering students are helping people worldwide, thanks to hands-on projects that allow students to apply their knowledge to real-world solutions.

This past year, for example, students took top honors in the RoboCup U.S. Open in Atlanta and placed fourth at the World RoboCup Championship competition in Germany, for their search-and-rescue robot that locates disaster victims. And engineering students working in El Salvador designed a method for bringing stable water supply to the small, rural village of La Laguneta.

College discretionary gifts and gifts designated for student teams enable engineering students to finance projects and travel to national and international competitions, or, in the case of Engineers Without Borders, drill wells in a third-world country, so villagers can receive an adequate supply of clean water year-round.

Graduate student Gabe Miller, president of Colorado State’s chapter of Engineering Without Borders, has been involved in the El Salvador project since it began two years. Working with donations received from rotary clubs in Colorado and El Salvador – and matching funds from Rotary Club International – engineering students assessed the water situation in the 1,200-person village of La Laguneta.

“For about five months each year, La Laguneta’s hand-dug wells almost entirely dry out, and villagers – mostly women and children – walk a long way to the river to wash clothes and bring water home,” Miller explains. “Families get by on about 10 gallons of water a day. Consequently, hygiene is often neglected.”

This past summer, the student group made their third trip and worked with some of Colorado’s best hydrologists to locate sites and drill two wells. When completely operational, the wells will deliver a constant supply of clean water to the people of La Laguneta and its neighbor village, El Chile.

Students will continue visiting El Salvador during school breaks to address issues related to water quality, hygiene, and the potential for more comprehensive watershed management, says Brian Bledsoe, civil engineering assistant professor and the chapter’s faculty mentor. The project will also involve students and faculty in other areas, he adds.

“We don’t see this as just Engineering Without Borders; it’s Students Without Borders,” says Bledsoe. “We’re involving students and faculty from natural resources and the social sciences. Our vision is to develop multidisciplinary teams of students that will travel together on these trips as their capstone experience.”

Practical and Financial Support for Future Restaurateurs

In 1987, Rayno Seaser and his wife, Patty, founded The Egg & I restaurant, a breakfast-and-lunch establishment whose motto is, “A breakfast so good, you’ll think we kidnapped your mother.” The restaurant’s friendly service, flower-bedecked tables, classical music, and homemade sauces offer diners a fine-dining experience at an affordable price.

It’s no wonder that customers consistently rate The Egg & I as “The Best Breakfast in Town” in Fort Collins and in the other 17 communities where The Egg & I franchises exist. The restaurant’s numerous awards include an Ethics in Business Award from the Better Business Bureau, the Restaurant Neighbor Award, for community involvement, from the National Restaurant Association, and an award from Jones Dairy Farm honoring the Seasers as one of America’s Best Restaurant Families.

“One of our philosophies at The Egg & I is that the community supports us and, in turn, it’s our responsibility to support the community,” says Rayno.

The Seasers generously donate to the surrounding community and also support Colorado State students in many different ways. The family is a big supporter of Ram athletics, Rayno sits on the College of Applied Human Sciences’ external advisory board and is often a guest speaker at the University, and the couple works closely with the College’s restaurant and resort management program to provide students with practical experience.

Having learned the restaurant business starting as dishwashers and working their way up, Rayno and Patty appreciate the restaurant and resort management program, which provides the restaurant industry with knowledgeable employees and interns.

Each year the Seasers sponsor a $1,000 scholarship to help a student enrolled in restaurant and resort management feel more comfortable while in school. Rayno adds, “We hope the scholarship will help students establish a closer bond with the University, so they may one day help another CSU student financially.”

New Libraries Collection Keeps the West’s Agricultural History Alive

Colorado State University Libraries is now home to the world’s most complete collection of Western Livestock Journal, thanks to an in-kind donation from Pete Crow, publisher, and Crow Publications, Inc.

Crow says he chose Colorado State for this donation because of the University’s strong agricultural program, particularly in the area of beef cattle.

Having the complete Western Livestock Journal set serves as a cornerstone for the Libraries’ Colorado Agricultural Archive, which continues to expand its holdings since its inception in 1980.

The 85-year-old Western Livestock Journal is the West’s longest, continuous livestock publication. It reports on market information and news, management, legislative issues affecting agriculture, land use, and the meat industry. The journal also includes human interest stories and current events.

“By having these archives, people have access to insights about production questions over time and what people were thinking about water policy, labor issues, industry demographics, and other key topics,” says agricultural sciences Professor Tom Field. “This collection provides a way to go back, week by week, and understand how people in the West were thinking and what their priorities were and why. With this history, people can gain a better understanding of our agricultural community and the forces of change acting upon it at any one time.”

Now available to faculty, staff, students and the community at-large, the collection eventually will be digitized and made available on the Libraries’ web site.

“We think this is something we can do for posterity,” says Crow. “It’s our philanthropic duty to the livestock industry and the community. As students use this collection, I hope it will give them a good perspective on just how cyclical this business is.”

Pete Crow
Investment and Distribution Policy Fiscal Year 2005-2006

Colorado State University Foundation (the “Foundation”), a not-for-profit corporation, was incorporated in 1970 for the following purposes: (a) to assist in the promotion, development, and enhancement of the facilities and educational programs and opportunities of the faculty, students, and alumni of Colorado State University and (b) to receive, manage, and invest contributions, gifts, and bequests and apply the principal or income generated therefrom exclusively for charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes which will directly or indirectly aid and benefit Colorado State University.

The Colorado State University Foundation is recognized as a 501(c)(3) tax-exempt organization under the Internal Revenue Code. The Foundation is legally separate from Colorado State University.

Endowment Distribution Policy

In the 2005-2006 academic year, 4.50 percent is available for spending (payout). To preserve the value of the endowment, excess investment returns (interest, dividends, realized and unrealized capital gains and losses) beyond the payout and the 1.50 percent Foundation administrative fee are reinvested to the endowment annually.

2005-2006 Asset Allocation

Assets are allocated to generate the highest possible returns given the safety of the principal. The Foundation’s Board of Directors meets regularly to review earnings performance. The portfolio and associated annual payouts may be modified to reflect market conditions. The pie chart below illustrates the 2005-2006 asset allocation.

Investment Objectives

The overall goal of the Foundation is to enhance the purchasing power of the University’s endowment while achieving the maximum total return consistent with the safety of the principal. The Foundation’s Board of Directors has the fiduciary responsibility for the management and investment of all charitable gifts for Colorado State University.

The investment objectives of the Foundation are designed to respond to changes in the economic environment, philosophy of the University and Foundation, and market conditions. The current investment objectives of the Foundation are:

Quality Standards. Investments in a wide range of assets are encouraged. A major portion of the portfolio consists of recognized high-grade investments.

Diversity. No individual investment, at the time of purchase, results in the holdings in any single corporation exceeding 5 percent of the market value of the portfolio.

Liquidity. Adequate provision is made in the invested funds of the Foundation to provide for anticipated withdrawals.

Performance. The performance of the portfolio (and investment managers) over time, is expected to compare favorably with market indices as well as rank high in comparisons with similar portfolios.

Howard H. Stonaker walks with a cane, moving a little slower these days. But he still has the sparkling eyes, easy smile and active mind that he had in 1942 when he joined the Colorado State University faculty. “Stony,” as he affectionately known, celebrated his 89th birthday in August with three of his best friends and Colorado State colleagues – Bob Temple, Tom Sutherland and Jim Brinks. The trio gathered to share stories of how Stony helped build Colorado State’s premier animal sciences department and how, on a personal level, he influenced each of their careers.

“He probably has contributed more to scientific animal breeding in the country, and certainly in the Rocky Mountain region, than anyone else,” Temple said. Dr. Stonaker encouraged Temple to apply for an animal breeding graduate scholarship at Colorado State, then to attend Iowa State University for his doctoral degree. “For many of us, he’s changed our lives,” Temple said.

Now another life is being changed by Dr. Stonaker, who served as Dean of the College of Agricultural Sciences from 1966-1968 before retiring in 1974. Thanks to a collaborative effort by Temple, Sutherland and Brinks, the Dr. H.H. Stonaker Scholarship in Animal Sciences has been established for a graduate student in animal genetics. Devori Beckman is the first recipient of the scholarship.

At the National Western Stock Show two years ago, Temple was surprised to learn that Colorado State’s Animal Sciences Department did not have a scholarship in Stony’s name. “I thought to myself, ‘Of all the people that I know here and had an influence on me, he was tops on the list,’” Temple said. Getting help from Sutherland and Brinks, both hired by Stonaker, the scholarship effort raised more than $100,000 in less than three months. “We sent out about 1,700 letters to students he taught and professors (in the department), and the response was phenomenal,” Temple said.

Sutherland said everywhere he goes in Colorado, he’s still asked by alumni, “How is Stony doing? They have universal respect for him,” he said. “We always figured if you wanted to have a successful dinner party, all you had to do was invite Stony and Betty Lou (his late wife). He had a new idea every minute – just click, click.”

Bill Wailes, current head of the Department of Animal Sciences, said Stonaker established the vision for the department. “We have a great reputation,” Wailes said. “It took someone to get it started, and he was the starting point.”

Brinks first met Stony at Iowa State, where Sutherland also studied, and later was lured to Colorado State by his mentor. At the time, Brinks coordinated cattle breeding for a USDA office in Denver that managed 12 western states. “Stony said, ‘We’ve got room up here at Colorado State, why not move your office here?’ So I did just that,” Brinks said.

Getting young scientists inspired and moving in their careers is a Stony trademark – a mentorship that lives on with his namesake scholarship. “There just can’t be any effort better than setting up a scholarship,” Stony said at his birthday celebration. “No doubt it brings highly competent students into the university to pursue the things they want to do. So I was delighted about it.”

Endowment Grand Total          $152,225,082
Private support provides the opportunity for Colorado State to attract and retain outstanding faculty members who will educate the future leaders of our state and nation. Private gifts have enhanced Colorado State’s teaching and research facilities. Gifts-in-kind of equipment and computers are used in laboratories and classrooms across campus. Charitable donations have funded research opportunities to make the discoveries of tomorrow.

Outright Gifts

Cash Gifts

The most popular way of giving is a cash contribution in the form of currency, money order, bank draft, or check made payable to the Colorado State University Foundation. In most cases your gift is tax deductible.

Gifts of Securities

Gifts of appreciated securities may be one of the most tax-wise ways to make a substantial contribution to Colorado State University.

There is a double tax benefit from such a gift. The full value of the securities is usually deductible and you don’t have to pay capital gains taxes on the increase in value. You may give and deduct appreciated property up to 30 percent of your adjusted gross income each year. Any excess amount may be deducted over the following five tax years.

Gifts of Real Estate

There are many ways to give real estate to benefit Colorado State University. The method you choose depends on your individual circumstances and needs and how you want your gift to support the University. Any gift of real estate is subject to acceptance by the University’s Land Acquisition Committee. These gifts are also subject to the Foundation’s right to sell and realize the proceeds if the property cannot be used by the University.

Non-Cash Gifts

Many donors choose to contribute artwork, books, musical instruments, manuscripts, furnishings, animals, and other personal property as acquisitions or additions to existing University collections. These assets can be used for outright gifts. The tax consequences for gifts of tangible personal property will differ and are dependent upon the nature of the asset and the standard of “related use.” The gift must be related to the University’s exempt function. Generally the “exempt function” means the gift of personal property must be put to use by the University and not sold at the time of the gift.

Planned Gifts

Bequests and Revocable Trusts, Retained Life Estate Agreement

One of the easiest and most common ways to make a planned gift is through a bequest in your will. Through a well-planned will, it’s possible to make charitable gifts of a specific amount, a particular property, a percentage of the estate, or all or a portion of your remainder – what’s left after providing for other heirs.

A bequest in your will is an excellent method to provide a charitable gift for Colorado State University. Upon your death, the Foundation will receive your gift and utilize the funds as directed in your will. For many donors, a bequest enables a substantial gift to be made to the Colorado State University Foundation that may not have been possible to make during their lifetimes.

Important estate tax savings can result from a gift by bequest, since bequests to the Foundation may be deducted entirely from the taxable estate for the purpose of determining estate taxes.

Your bequest may be one or both of the following:

- Specific Bequest – a bequest of a fixed amount of money or specific property; or
- Proportional Bequest – a bequest of a specified portion or percentage of the residue of the estate, usually after other provisions have been fulfilled.

The proportional bequest is advantageous because it is self-adjusting to the size of the estate. A specific bequest might require revision from time to time as the size of the estate changes.

Charitable Gift Annuity

Through a charitable gift annuity, you can make a gift to CSU and receive fixed annual payments for life. The payment amount is based on your age (or the age of the payment recipients) when the gift is completed. The older the donor (recipient) the larger the payments.

An income tax deduction is allowed for a portion of the amount transferred. For a period of years, only part of the payments will be taxed as income. If stocks or other property that has risen in value is given in exchange for a gift annuity that pays income to a donor and/or spouse, the realized capital gain can generally be reported at what may be more favorable capital gains tax rates over a period of time. If you (the donor) and/or a spouse are the only payment beneficiaries, the amount used to fund a gift annuity is generally not subject to estate taxes that might otherwise be due.

The payment can begin currently or can be deferred for a period of time at your determination (but no more than 20 years). You can name yourself as the sole annuitant or designate another annuitant, either solely, concurrently, or consecutively.

A sum of money or certain other property may be used to establish a gift annuity. An income tax deduction is allowed for a portion of the amount transferred in exchange for a gift annuity. Up to two people may qualify for annual gift annuity payments.
Charitable Remainder Annuity Trust and Charitable Remainder Unitrust

Charitable remainder trusts are irrevocable trusts that feature income to be paid to lifetime beneficiaries. The annuity trust pays a fixed income based on the value of assets at the time the trust is created, while the unitrust provides a fluctuating income based on a fixed percentage of the trust’s market value as determined on an annual basis.

When the trust is created, capital gains tax can be postponed, and an income tax deduction is available for a portion of the value of the property. Income from the charitable remainder trust may be taxed favorably under lower capital gains tax rates. There may also be estate tax benefits.

When the trust is created, an income tax deduction is allowed for a portion of the principal used to establish the trust. Throughout the life of the trust, income is reportable to you (or another income beneficiary) based on the nature of the assets held in trust.

Life Estate Agreement

Entering into a Life Estate Agreement is another way to donate a ranch, farm, or residence for those donors who want to continue to enjoy and use their property during their lives. While an actual transfer of the future interest in the property is made to the Colorado State University Foundation now, you may still live in the home or on the farm for the rest of your life.

At the time of the irrevocable transfer of ownership of the property, a substantial income tax deduction may be allowed. The charitable deduction is the full market value of the property minus the calculated dollar value of the retained life estate as determined by government tables. This donation allows you the full use of your property during your lifetime and the lifetime of your beneficiary. You continue to pay maintenance, insurance, and taxes and retain other rights, including the right to rent the property. The residence does not need to be the principal residence – it can be a second residence or vacation home. If it is a farm, the donor does not need to reside on the farm when it is given to the Foundation.

For example, if you irrevocably transfer your home to CSU, you retain the right to live in it for your lifetime, a term of years, or a combination of the two. You may also use a vacation home to create this kind of gift. While you retain the right to live on the property, you continue to be responsible for all routine expenses, maintenance fees, insurance, property taxes, repairs, etc. If you later decide to vacate your property, you may rent all or part of the property to someone else or sell the property in cooperation with CSU.

Owner or Beneficiary of Life Insurance Policy or Retirement Plan

Gifts of life insurance have valuable and attractive benefits for the University and the donor. If you have no dependents, or when your dependents no longer need the protection of an existing life insurance policy, you can give the policy to the Foundation and gain substantial tax benefits for the year of your gift. If you make a gift of an existing life insurance policy, you can make a sizable gift without reducing your income, you may receive an immediate and substantial federal income tax deduction, you may receive deductions for future premium payments, and your federal estate taxes may be reduced or eliminated, depending on the size of your estate.

You may also purchase a new life insurance policy and name the Colorado State University Foundation owner and irrevocable beneficiary. In this case, you receive a charitable deduction for the unexpired premium in the year of the gift and all future premiums.

Another alternative is for you to name the Colorado State University Foundation as beneficiary of a life insurance policy you still control and own. Although you do not receive a federal income tax deduction now, you may reduce estate taxes because the proceeds are a charitable gift.

Giving Through Retirement Plans

Individual Retirement Accounts (IRAs), company-sponsored pension and profit-sharing plans, and other methods of saving for retirement may be appealing sources for charitable gifts. If you are over age 59½ and find that you have more than adequate resources set aside for retirement, it may be wise to periodically use a portion of your retirement funds to make charitable gifts.

Amounts remaining in qualified retirement plans at death may be subject to income taxes and possibly estate taxes when received by heirs. For this reason, charitable gifts of retirement plan balances can be a gift of choice from income tax and estate planning perspectives.

If you wish to provide a loved one with income while also providing for your charitable interests, retirement plans can be designated to fund a special type of gift to meet both objectives. All arrangements must be made with the plan sponsor, not through your will.
Other Gift Considerations
Your philanthropic gifts are an investment in the current and future success of Colorado State University. Whether you make an unrestricted or designated gift, you can choose to use your gift to create an endowment fund or an expendable (non-endowed) fund.

A gift to establish an endowment creates a perpetual source of funding by keeping the principal of the gift intact forever. Only the income of the fund’s earnings can be spent to support Colorado State University in the manner of your choice. A portion of the endowment earnings is added to the principal in an effort to keep pace with inflation. Your endowment gift will support Colorado State for generations.

If you choose to use your gift to establish an expendable fund, the fund may be spent in its entirety to support Colorado State University in the manner of your choice at the time the gift is made. Your non-endowed gift will be expended for current needs of programs you select.

Named Endowment Opportunities
Endowment levels indicate the minimum funding required from private sector donors. Each chair, professorship or other endowment may need to be funded at a higher level to meet the needs of a specific program. According to the current spending policy of Colorado State University Foundation, 4.5 percent of an endowment’s market value is available for allocation each year. This policy is subject to change at the discretion of the Foundation Board.

$3 Million • University Endowed Chair
This designation is accorded to that select number of faculty judged to be truly outstanding scholars and teachers according to rigorous, nationally accepted standards. The title of University Chair is one of the highest honors Colorado State University may award to a faculty member. The reputations of recipients reflect their special creative and research contributions, as well as their efforts in shaping the world’s understanding of their field of study. University Chairs at Colorado State, as at other prestigious universities, constitute that small cadre of exceptionally gifted professors whose names evoke immediate acknowledgement and respect in academic circles. Annual allocations from the endowment are expected to fund the salary, benefits, and operational costs for the position.

$750,000 • University Professorship
This designation is intended to enhance faculty positions held by scholars/teachers with outstanding qualifications. The achievements and qualifications of Distinguished Professors are expected to be extremely high, setting them apart from the majority of their colleagues. Earnings from these endowments supplement faculty salary lines.

$375,000 • College Professorship
Professorships are typically held by gifted faculty members whose accomplishments indicate great potential. Their efforts are focused on honing their teaching skills and on carving out areas of research or performance. Earnings from these endowments supplement faculty salary lines.

$250,000 • Endowed Visiting Lecturer or Artist Fund
This designation is reserved for those select and accomplished leaders who are invited to lecture or teach at Colorado State University for a limited period of time and are not permanent members of the Colorado State faculty.

$50,000 • Endowed Graduate Fellowship
Fellowships are awarded to students performing research on campus. These fellowships enable outstanding students to continue their pursuit of research on the graduate level.

$25,000 • Endowed Scholarship or Program Fund
Scholarship or program endowments support students or programs in any of Colorado State University’s colleges or units.
